Freedom's Conditioned Reflex

Old firehorses, they say, never used to forget what a firebell meant after they were turned out to pasture. They had a conditioned reflex. They wanted to do their duty even when no call for duty was being made.

It may be true, as Sen. Eastland of Mississippi says it is, that there is no animosity against the press or any segment of the press in the investigation of Communist influence in the field of communications by the Senate Internal Security subcommitte.

Certainy the large number of Americans who work in communications are in no position to claim that the Communist conspiracy has made no attempt to infiltrate this important field; they know better, But among them are many old firehorses with a conditioned reflex.

The implied purpose of every congressional investigation is to obtain information with bearing on existing or proposed legislation. The First Amendment in the Bill of Rights states that Congress shall make no law abridging freedom of the press.

Therefore though no law is contemplated, the firehorses of the press cannot be blamed for prancing when congressional investigators turn their attention to newspapers. The price of liberty, as they well know, is eternal vigilance, even though they have been assured that no harm is intended.

Imperfect Crime

Except for the theft in Bangkok of a twomillion-dollar gold shipment in 1948 by 20 bandits to get a better competitive posi- iron company. disguised as policemen and soldiers, the Brink's holdup in Boston six years ago next Tuesday was the biggest theft in modern times.

It looked like a perfect crime until the FBI announced on Thursday it had solved the mystery of how nine men entered the main building of an armored car service and walked away with upward of a million and a-half dollars in cash and checks. Eleven men were in the plot. One has died six were taken into custody this week, two already were in jail and two more are still at large. Thus does another "perfect crime" come to a close. The FBI believes it has the evidence to close the Brink's case.

The outcome is a tribute to the thoroughness of modern police work-an endless search and sift process. For nearly six years the FBI brought police skill to bear on the problem of pinning down the men and the means of the Brink's robbery. It questioned thousands of suspects, followed up dozens of false leads, even located the pieces of a truck that had beer, cut up for scrap metal.

There may be perfect crimes. But perfect police work reduces them to the vanishing point. No band of criminals can be a match for an organization like the FBI.

What Hoover Commission Proves

The best guess about the 141 Hoover Commission proposals now before Congress is that only the unimportant ones will escape the pigeonhold treatment.

This is because the important ones would save billions of dollars a year if put into effect, and Conress is not famous for saving money in an election year. Congress mistrusts all ideas for saving money.

The handicap of the Hoover Commission throughout its monumental project of trying to save money and improve public service has been automatic congressional opposition to major recommendations, even when they were unquestionably sound.

Although the opposition has been offset to some extent by voter pressure on congressmen, it is the reason for the pigeonhole treatment that awaits important proposals.

This proves that such a commission is needed. A new one should be set up as soon as there has been enough time for Congress to pigeonhole the recommendations of the commission that expired last September.

Theoretically Congress should do the job alone, with help from the executive branch. But in practice, the executive and legislative branches develop strong vested interests in things as they are. They do not want efficiency at the price of change. Only taxpayers want that—and experience has shown that taxpayers get more attention from a quasi-public agency like the Hoover Commission than they get from Congress, Taxpayers need an authoritative, powerful lobby in Washington to look after their interests.

Letter To Secretary Dulles

Dear Foster: If it isn't one brink its another, l always say. But you are the Brink of the Month Man, and, like Fiorello LaGuardia used to say of himself, when you pull a boner you pull a beaut. You don't sem to understand that "What magazine is running the government?" is a fair question these days, and I heard of one editor who is so exhausted governing the country that he went to Key West to get a rest from the "overload." Any time you hear "All is quiet on the Potomac" today you can feel pretty sure its because the magazine editors have run out of river-going

ANY PUBLIC SERVANT not writing a book or doing a magazine article just now rates a medal for Restraint Beyond the Call of Publicity. Things have reached a stage where the people think a big military, naval or civil official who keeps his trap closed must be a prisoner or lost in combat in some magazine office.

You have enough headaches without finding yourself among the feature stories on movie stars, the wonders of nature and the Kelly-Rainier romance, but it is hard to feel sorry, as you made the worst of all errors you sat for an interview and didn't even bother to see the proofs! In these days of high speed and big events a statement on world affairs by a secretary of state could get mixed up with an interview with Anna Magnani on love or with Bob Hope on the mistake of letting himself be tossed around by a woman acrobat. m.5m.

YOUR PICTURE COULD even get into the article on the whooping crane while the photo of a crane got into your article under the caption "John Foster Dulles Leaping From Brink to Brink."

Take a tip from me and always take time to read proof on any interview. You say you never bothered to review it, didn't read it until after publication and didn't even know the title. Brother, you take chances. Three trips to a brink of war are two over par on any course, and even when you get into print on one brink of war you had better check on how it looks

The quote "The ability to get to the verge of war without getting into war is a necessary art" is what caused all the rumpus and you admit this was "ambiguous." Gosh, Foster, an ambiguous brink is the worst of all brinks, SOMEBODY IN YOUR OFFICE looked over the article, went over brink after brink and passed it as if he took precipices as routine and could lick any abyss in the house. Hollywood has done "Helen of Troy" and at the Broadway premiere we expect to find a lot of race-track boys playing the wooden horse place and show. When will the SEC get around to vetoing the absurdity of insisting that huge advertisements of stock flotations must not be regarded as offers to do business? The biggest laugh so far came when full page advertisements announcing the marketing of 10,200,000 shares of Ford stock bore the lines "This is not an offering of these shares for sale, or an offer to buy or a solicitation of an offer to buy." . . . (Just an optical illusion, ya mean?) Charlie Loftus of Yale and his staff won in every one of over 100 categories in a contest to choos the best college football program. Award is attracting attention of big magazine men to the Eli Publications setup.

Care Must Be Taken To Keep Water Safe

ices not guarantee safe water at the faucets, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau in calling attention to the importance of proper installation of plumbing

Scientific treatment of raw water for domestic use has become a very important and a very essential function in American cities, but such treatment can be rendered ineffective by improper piping connections anywhere along the piping system, the Bureau points out, Every plumbing fixture in home or building is the end of the water supply and the beginning of the sewage or waste system Because many dangerous disease germs live and thrive in polluted water, it is vital to the protection of health that there be no opportunity for waste water to intermingle with pure water as it comes from the city mains. Many innocent appearing cross-

Method: To make the cornmeal mush for the topping, mix together the tomato sauce, 21/2 cups water, 1/2 teaspoons salt and cumin seed Mix cornmeal and the 1 cup cold water together. Pour into the boiling liquid, stirring constantly. Cook over moderate heat until thickened, stirring often. Cover: continue cooking over low heat 10 minutes or longer. Let cool slightly. Line bacon drippings in a large skillet; add chopped onion and ground beef. Cook until meat has lost ts red color, mashing with a long kitchen fork to separate into crumbles. Add drained tomatoes, chili powder, 1 teaspoon salt and 1/4 teaspoon pepper; simmer about 10 minutes. Pour filling into casseroles. Top with remaining mush. Bake in a moderate (350 degrees) oven about 20 minutes. If filling
